The age-old question about the afterlife arises as much today as it did in the past. Do purgatory and hell await us, as people feared in the Middle Ages? Or can we still hope for a place in heaven? Will we meet our loved ones again – or even the unloved neighbour? And how should we even imagine all of this? The authors address the concrete questions that they have been asked time and again in their adult education seminars. In a vivid but also humorous way, they examine the conventional ideas to see what we can think and responsibly believe today. This is an engaging and entertaining book for people who are curious.
